I'm a International Business student at Florida International University with hands-on experience in labor-intensive work and student led media development. I have built a strong work ethic through practical labor roles that emphasize responsibility, teamwork, and operational efficiency, shaping my disciplined and results-oriented approach to professional growth.

Hence, I founded and developed a webpage called Pandemics Tempora, my school newspaper focused on preserving institutional knowledge and enhancing academic and cultural awareness within the school community. Through this project, I have gained experience in leadership, content coordination, communication strategy, and long-term knowledge management.

Driven by a desire to bridge practical work experience with business education, I am particularly interested in how organizational structure, information flow, and workforce development contribute to sustainable institutions. My goal is to grow at the intersection of international business, labor dynamics, and knowledge preservation, creating impact through disciplined execution and strategic thinking.
